Some issues have been noted within the school museum.

It has a large amount of studying material, such as objects, information about them. However, this material is not used properly.

The main issue is the lack of engagement between students and the material, which only possibly goes two ways.

Students themselves do not visit the museum: either they are simply busy due to their tight schedule, or they choose not to go, as they deem it pointless and exhausting. In order to rapidly increase the amount of visitors, the museum must be promoted in any possible way. The only requirements ~~will~~ be no unnecessary, misleading output. That way, the museum's reputation will grow, and there ~~will~~ ^{will also} be people.

But what reputation could a school museum get without proper check-ups? Quality must always be above quantity: all unrelated material, especially if nothing about it is proven, has to be replaced with ~~material~~ artifacts meant for research within the school's curriculum. This will lead to a simpler yet more interactive education, therefore ~~letting~~ ^{limiting} the as many limitations as possible.

In conclusion, ^{in order} to enhance the museum's overall experience, there must be immediate action ^{behind} within its own doors, rather than students & themselves.
